I INTRODUCTION

Thanks to Robert Sattelmeyer's Thoreau's Reading we have been able during the two years since its publication to see the "bibliographical forest" better than the clumps of trees which comprised the earlier lists—with the happy result that we can now reverse the binoculars and (to change the figure) plant some new trees in that forest and clear away some of the accumulated underbrush. In one respect a good bibliography is like a woman's dress—never done, never definitive and ever being lengthened or trimmed. That is both the glory and irony of it!

In this second instalment or "expansion" of Sattelmeyer's useful work I have continued the method set forth in the first (ARLR, III, 297), hoping to add a third in the future as the next Princeton volumes appear. Meanwhile, however, much "intelligent guessing" must be undertaken and tested concerning books and articles Thoreau possibly read, consulted or skimmed—a necessity if we are to bridge some of the still serious gaps in the record. Here are a few of them: (1) At least one page of his borrowings at Harvard Library has been cut out of the ledgers—possibly at the turn of the century by a collector of literary autographs, thereby denying us proof of several months of significant reading. (2) His sophomore and junior withdrawals from the library of the Institute of 1770 are also missing—probably destroyed—so that we may never have the evidence of two years of happy extracurricular reading at the fraternity in which he debated, "spouted" and found intellectual companionship among intimate friends. (3) Only a few loose pages, moreover, survive of his Harvard commonplace book (his Index Rerum) in which he indexed ideas taken from his reading. (4) No extant charging registers in several New York libraries provide traces of his intensive reading during 1843. (5) The Concord Town Library, which for twenty years supplied him with a remarkable array of periodicals as well as a complete file of the Massachusetts Historical Society's Collections, seems to have kept no tab on his visits and frequent borrowings, or, if it originally had check-out papers, they were probably destroyed when it became the Concord Free Public Library! (6) We are still largely ignorant of his vast reading in periodicals and newspapers because we do not skim as he seems to have done from cover to cover—everything within reach pertinent to his interests. Unless we follow his example and survey the complete contents of all periodicals that he handled or ought to have handled, I fear we shall continue ignorant of much of his profitable reading and miss many interesting discoveries.

In this connection, I include at the end of the present study such a scanning of twenty-five volumes of a periodical with which Thoreau was definitely acquainted from his Harvard days into his maturity—the North American Review. For whatever it may prove to be worth I submit it as a hypothetical bibliography of influences upon his life and thinking, hoping that it may prove useful or at least interesting to scholars who may wrestle sooner or later with the still unedited notebooks on natural phenomena and the Indians.

I quote the former: "Alwākidi's Design was not to write the Life of any particular Caliph, but to give an Account of the Conquest of Syria He is chiefly valuable for this, that we find Materials in him which we have nowhere else, and he is not so sparing of them, but there is Liberty enough to pick and chuse.... "The Cherokees and the President." Unidentified newspaper, ca. 1852-1854. Clipping pasted into [913].

The Cherokees and the President.

We learn from the Cherokee Advocate that the late Message of President Polk proposing a division of the territory and the extension of the criminal laws of the United States over the Cherokees had produced much feeling among nearly all the people, and that the excitement would be much greater only that they cannot believe the people of the United States will sanction a measure of such highhanded injustice.

Although it has been the practice of this Government to break faith with the Indian Tribes whenever its supposed interest has seemed to require such an outrage, yet it does seem that the Cherokees have been afflicted with their full share of parental care on the part of the United States. It is only about fifteen years since these people were driven at the point of the bayonet from their possessions and the graves of their fathers, in the State of Georgia, and it is now proposed to make another onslaught upon them. We find in the last Advocate the following address from the Acting Chief, Mr. Lowrey, to the people of this Country, and commend it to the careful perusal of all who would see justice prevail.

To the Christian Community of the United States.

BELIEVED FRIENDS: I should not take the liberty of coming before you with any of my distresses, were it not for that brotherly love which unites the hearts of children of God in every land, and makes it their duty to know, and bear each other's burdens. Many of you, I presume, have already sympathized with the Cherokees, and shared deeply with their afflictions. I would not, therefore, call on you to contemplate past events, farther than shall be necessary to represent our present distressed condition; nor can I represent this but in part.

From time immemorial, the Cherokees were peculiarly happy in each other, and in their own chiefs, and government. At length the United States Government displayed special kindness, in erecting mills, and smith-shops, and in furnishing us with implements for domestic and agricultural employments, and especially in encouraging, and sending missionaries to instruct us and our children, not only in literature, but in the great doctrines of religion. We wished to follow the advice and example of the United States as far as we consistently could, and therefore adopted a republican form of Government, in which the majority ruled; and all the people at the return of stated periods, assembled to elect their officers. Under this government they lived happily for a number of years. At length, however, by circumstances entirely beyond control, divisions were excited among them, and the kindest ties of friendship were broken; so that brother was set against brother, son against father, and friend against friend. The Nation, however, clung, and still clings, to its Republican Government; but the divisions introduced a number of years ago still continue to exist, and the minority dissent from the government formed by a large majority of the people, and decline submission to the laws they have elected. I do not mean this to wound the feelings or injure the character of the minority, but simply to make known our situation. Our officers being sworn into office, felt bound to maintain, as far as possible, the government and laws of the Nation, while a law of the minority—I repeat, but the—was determined to put them down. And thus there is a direct collision. Could we make a law that the minority should govern, without destroying all government, and introducing more anarchy, or could we do any thing else consistently to bring back that brotherly affection which but a few years ago existed among us, I for one should rejoice to do it. But the question recurs what can we do? The darkness grows still darker, in our path; and I greatly fear the effects of a continued division, let the parties be separated or not. And though I would not call in question the purity of the President's motives in recommending a division of the country and the extension of the criminal laws of the United States over us, yet I greatly fear the effects of such a measure, as being likely to produce very disastrous consequences. If not the entire destruction of the Nation. But with the Nation must fall also, all our Churches, Schools, and Institutions for religious and literary improvement, and all our hopes, and the hopes of the Christian public with regard to our future prosperity. Although those of us who have a knowledge of God supplicate his aid and arms of us a good night in prayer, and cling to their God, our only hope, yet we are very conscious of the weakness of the Cherokee Nation, and the weakness of the people of them, called upon again to remove without their consent.

In view of our present distresses, and the gathering clouds which seem to threaten us, I most earnestly beg and entreat your immediate, fervent and effectual prayers in our behalf. O, pray for the distressed Cherokees. Pray that the United States Government may be directed by faithful Wisdom to such a course as shall be best calculated to reneale us in our former united and happy condition. Your afflicted brother in the gospel,

GEORGE LOWREY,
Acting Principal Chief Cherokee Nation.

Sparks, Jared + Cornelius Conway Felton, "McKenney and Hall's History of the North American Indians," North American Review, XLVII, no. 100 (July, 1838), 134-148. (This article was a review of Thomas L. McKinney and James Hall, History of the Indian Tribes of North America, with Biographical Sketches and Anecdotes of the Principal Chiefs, vol. I (Phila.) It contains the two passages which T. copied into LN, 143 and 145: "Red-Jacket said to the missionaries—'Your talk is fair and good. But I propose this; Go try your hand in the town of Buffalo for one year. They need missionaries, if you can do what you say. If in that time you shall have done them any good, and made them any better, then we will let you come among our people.'" "Tecumseh, or Tecumthé, is said to have exclaimed—'Sell a country! why not sell the air, the clouds and the great sea, as well as the earth? Did not the Great Spirit make them all for the use of his children?'"

BOOK LIST OF THOREAU'S INTENDED
 READING IN THE 1840's, MOST OF IT IN BOOKS TO BE BORROWED
 FROM EMERSON'S LIBRARY OF THAT PERIOD. THE LIST IS HEADED BY
 DATES OF HIS RETURN JOURNEY
 FROM MAINE IN 1846—POSSIBLY ADDED LATER.

As early as 1957, in his Thoreau's Library, Walter Harding called our attention to penciled notes in T's copy of Phelps & Squire's Travellers' Guide (New York, 1838), here edited with the permission of the Rare Book Room of the New York Public Library. I follow them with full bibliographical listings, indicating which volumes Emerson owned.
